- 1     Teleconference Training Session - Emerging Approaches in Documenting Benefits of Heritage Conservation
As more interest has been paid in recent years to the economics of heritage conservation, innovative scholars, public sector analysts, and heritage advocates have begun to experiment with new methodologies and approaches. Some of these have attempted to quantify what had formerly been seen as non-quantifiable values such as "quality of life" and "strengthened local communities." This session will look at these new approaches, how they are conducted, and some of the findings that have been reached.
